Race, Gender, and Culture in International Relations. Edited by Randolph B. Persaud and Alina Sajed. Routledge, 2018. In the present political epoch, it is ever more important to understand how race and gender work in our collective lives. Fascist resurgence, white supremacist terror, and international networks of hard right political movements have returned to central stage globally and the well-worn analytics of traditional IR have very little explanatory power in the face of these dynamics.

Review - Race, Gender, and Culture in International Relations

The "Race" section exposes the rampant emotionalism that drives protests against "hate speech" and the narrative that racism is, to some extent, innate in everyone. Her section on "Gender" serves as a reality check on third-wave feminism and shows how identity politics is harming businesses and universities. "The Bureaucracy ...
